

Robert Oppenheimer, born April 22, 1904, in New York City, was a theoretical physicist who became the first director of the Los Alamos National Laboratory during the Manhattan Project. He is often referred to as the "father of the atomic bomb."

Robert Oppenheimer, born April 22, 1904, in New York City, was a theoretical physicist who became the first director of the Los Alamos National Laboratory during the Manhattan Project. He is often referred to as the "father of the atomic bomb."

Robert Oppenheimer, born April 22, 1904, in New York City, was a theoretical physicist who became the first director of the Los Alamos National Laboratory during the Manhattan Project. He is often referred to as the "father of the atomic bomb."

Robert Oppenheimer, born April 22, 1904, in New York City, was a theoretical physicist who became the first director of the Los Alamos National Laboratory during the Manhattan Project. He is often referred to as the "father of the atomic bomb."